USACOM team visits

1st Lt. Geoffrey Fischer
Chief, Public Affairs

An assessment visit, sponsored by U.S. Atlantic Command, took place here Sunday through Friday covering disaster preparedness, agriculture and education.

All week people representing numerous agencies of the U.S. government, USACOM, the American Consulate and Embassy, and U.S. Forces Azores held meetings with representatives from the Regional Government and local schools.

A message from the Secretary of State explained the reason for the visit. "This assessment focuses on the technical cooperation component of the agreement. It brings together experts with a broad vision of their field and resources available to fulfill the U.S. commitment."

"This meeting isn't meant to be an exhaustive study, but it is an excellent starting point," said Dr. Diane Bellis, U.S. Department of Agriculture International Research and Scientific Exchanges.

"There are areas in the U.S. government that have a mutual interest in the Azores," said Cmdr. Vesterman, USACOM. "We asked agencies within the government if they would be interested in exploring these areas and people said, 'Yes.'"

These meetings are a result of USACOM breaking new ground in an effort to solve a problem in an area where they have an interest, said Vesterman. It's new for the command to gather together and be the focal point for the numerous government agencies which could have an interest in the Azores.

"This is an opportunity to open other opportunities," said Joao Maria Mendes, adjutant of the Azores Regional Government, in a television interview aired on RTP Azores.

Limit use of WWW to after duty hours

By SSgt Jeffrey Bone
Network Manager

The World Wide Web (WWW) is the latest consumer craze and a valuable tool for Air Force members. It can be used in a variety of ways and for many different purposes. It provides access to information useful for personal and professional growth.

"We use it for gathering information to help with school papers, planning for upcoming assignments, keeping abreast of promotion line numbers, staying current with news from home via the hometown news on-line and sometimes even looking up football scores," said 1Lt. Ryan Plunkett. "These things are important but must be secondary to the mission."

Right now Lajes Field is unable to complete mission essential tasks mainly due to the high volume usage of the WWW for personal reasons during duty hours. The Network Control Center recently conducted a test of bandwidth usage (bandwidth is the size of the pipe that gives us access to the WWW).

"We have 128 kilobytes of bandwidth for the entire base," said Plunkett. "That bandwidth is used for electronic mail (e-mail), WWW and mission essential tasks like logistics, contracting, civil engineering, mission support and the medical group."

"We are asking everyone who has access to the WWW to please refrain from using it for personal reasons during duty hours and anyone who has accessed one of those off-limit sites, stop now while you still have freedom of choice."

Lt. Col. Gary Kemp
65th Communications Squadron commander

According to SSgt. Warren Busbee, base network management analyst, "Bandwidth utilization routinely runs between 98 percent and 108 percent which in a nut shell means our demand is greater than our supply."

Plunkett said, "The bandwidth utilization study lasted a week. During that week we captured every packet that passed through the network. We discovered that fifteen percent was used for e-mail, 15 percent for mission traffic and the rest, 70 percent was WWW traffic."

The profiler program provided some very detailed spreadsheets showing the web sites that were being hit by users base-wide and how much traffic was downloaded from each site. It was nearly unbelievable how much information was downloaded from unofficial locations.

"Worse, in this day and age where the Air Force policy is zero tolerance, we still have people accessing illegal pornographic sites.

These sites are off limits and can cost you your career," said Lt. Col. Gary Kemp, 65th Communications Squadron commander.

"Please know that every base in the Air Force has the same ability to monitor traffic that we have and there is even an Air Force organization activated to police network traffic.

"We don't want to be the network security forces but should the need arise we have the capability to name every user account accessing illegal sites.

"We are asking everyone who has access to the WWW to please refrain from using it for personal reasons during duty hours and anyone who has accessed one of those off-limit sites, stop now while you still have freedom of choice."

65th MG announces opening of new women's health care clinic at Lajes in early 1998

The 65th Medical Group is proud to announce the opening of a new Women's Health Care Clinic which should be operational in early 1998.

The new clinic will be staffed with an obstetrical/gynecological nurse practitioner and OB/GYN technician.

Recently we surveyed the community to assess your needs and expectations. An overall majority of those surveyed indicated a need for improvement in the way we meet the health care needs of the female population of our community.

The feasibility and need for a separate female health clinic was discussed in detail during a special executive staff meeting which included medical providers and community representatives.

Some of the services we hope to provide through our new women's health care clinic include annual or routine pap screening, vaginal exams and all the routine female health related problems or concerns.

The nurse practitioner will be able to provide several preventive health related services to include one-on-one teaching for self breast exams, birth control options and prenatal and postnatal care.

Teaching and counseling will be important aspects of this new service.

Does this mean you can't see your family physician for your female health concerns or problems any more? No, all of our family practice physicians are trained and desire to continue to provide this type of health care for you.

They will in fact, supervise the health care provided by the nurse practitioner if you chose this option. The difference is that now you will have a choice of where you are to be followed for your needs.

High risk pregnancies and complicated gynecological situations will continue to require referral outside our facility. In conjunction with your Family Practice physician or our local Portuguese partnership obstetrician/gynecologist this clinic will be able to provide continuity in your routine pregnancy health care teaching and health care needs.

The 65th MG is excited about the continuity of care this new service can provide and the multitude of preventive health care services we can continue to provide and expand on in the future. (Courtesy of the 65th Medical Group Unit Public Affairs Representative)

Does the Azores have an airline? Where does it fly to?

A: The Azores has a regional airline called SATA-AIR AZORES.

The airline was established Aug. 21, 1941, however the first flight didn't take place until June 15, 1947 when a seven-passenger Beechcraft aircraft flew between the islands of Sao Miguel and Santa Maria.

SATA currently operates a fleet of three ATP aircraft manufactured by British Aerospace, one Dornier 228 from Deutsche Aerospace and a Boeing 737/300. The airline flies to all the Azorean islands and operates charter flights between mainland Portugal and various cities in Europe using a Boeing 737.

Given its JAR 145 certification, it also offers technical assistance to other aircraft using the Azorean airports:

U-2 flights must continue say American top leaders

SMSgt. Jim Katzaman
Air Force News Service

WASHINGTON — Iraq may be playing a dangerous game of brinkmanship with U.N. inspectors, but President Clinton and Vice President Gore say the inspections and U-2 over-flights must continue.

The president and vice president spoke as the United Nations considered sanctions against Iraq for blocking inspectors on the ground and threatening to shoot down U-2 aircraft that passed over Iraqi territory.

Inspectors and surveillance flights are trying to verify that Iraq is not developing weapons of mass destruction. These would include nuclear, biological or chemical weapons.

"I want every single American to understand what is at stake here," Clinton said. "These inspectors, since 1991, have discovered and destroyed more weapons of mass destruction potential than were destroyed in Iraq in the entire Gulf War. They are doing what they should be doing. They must get back to work. And the international community must demand it."

Gore said that Iraq must observe the U.N. resolutions "in every particular." This includes

U-2 flights, which resumed Nov. 10. Despite Iraqi threats, the mission was completed without incident.

"We're going to continue activities such as the U-2 flights," Gore said, "and we'll await the results of these [U.N.] discussions and take further steps only after full consultation."

Asked if the U-2 pilot on the Nov. 10 mission was ever in danger, Defense Secretary William S. Cohen replied, "All of our men and women who are stationed around the globe, be they in South Korea, be they in the Gulf region, be they in any part of the world where there is a potential for harm, are in danger."

"Certainly the pilots who fly over the no-fly zones are in danger, and the U-2 pilot ... was in some danger." However, Cohen added that the risk of attack was low.

"We sent a very clear, unequivocal message to Saddam Hussein, through a variety of channels, that were any harm to come to that pilot, any attack to be made upon that aircraft, that it would result in some fairly significant consequences."

"It would be a big mistake for Saddam to have attacked that aircraft, and, fortunately, no such attack came about."

American Express for official use only

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — As the holiday season approaches, government travel card officials remind users that American Express automated teller machine cash is for official use only.

Meanwhile, the General Services Administration has closed the bids for the new travel card contract that will take effect Dec. 1, 1998.

John Stull, director of account development for American Express Government Services, noted the link between card abuse and financial mismanagement.

"We consistently see a correlation between inappropriate use of cash and cardholder delinquencies," he said. "This is especially true during the holiday season. In 1995 and 1996, the percentage of cash withdrawn over the December holidays by Air Force cardholders increased more than 10 percent, leading to a spike in delinquencies."

Under the next contract, not all agencies will have to use the same travel card vendor, and the Defense Department can customize the new card to fit specific travel patterns of Air Force travelers around the world.

New technology saves money, man-hours

By Senior Airman M. Ward
6th Air Refueling Wing Public Affairs

MACDILL AIR FORCE BASE, Fla. — Flying on the cutting edge of technology, a new aircraft rinse facility at MacDill will save money by providing preventive maintenance, minimizing man-hours and conserving water.

"The tanker rinse facility is the first of its kind," said David Hansen, 6th Civil Engineer Squadron, chief of engineering. "There are aircraft corrosion control devices in the Air Force for smaller aircraft, but none that will accommodate a KC-135 aircraft."

Costing about $8,000 to construct, Hansen said the project should prove to be very cost effective. "Any preventive maintenance which can be performed to make the aircraft last longer will save the Air Force money in the long run," he said.

The rinse facility, also known as the "bird bath," was a Base Realignment and Closure Commission military construction project to bed down the wing, said Hansen. "A lot of detailed research went into the planning of the project," he said. "Working with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers from Mobile, Ala., Air Mobility Command and Air Force field experts, we couldn't find anyone who had constructed a rinse facility for KC-135s."

The search began immediately for large-aircraft rinse facilities, said Doug Cunningham, Corps of Engineers' project mechanical engineer. "To research the project, we flew to Naval Air Station Jacksonville, Fla., to view their large-aircraft rinse facility," he said. "Though the system is more than 20 years old, we modeled our system after theirs using the same concept."

Initially, it was difficult to gauge the amount of water it would take to rinse a tanker aircraft, Cunningham said. "It took a lot of trial and error to get everything right. We changed spray nozzles, their directions and water amounts to make the system more effective."

Not to be confused with an aircraft wash rack, the rinse facility uses only water, said Cunningham. "Aircraft are rinsed with 3,900 gallons of water during a three-minute interval," he said. "Pilots taxi the aircraft to the rinse area which contains an inductive loop sensor. When the aircraft rolls on to the pad, a spray sequence begins."

Using the new rinse facility can save water and man-hours, said Cunningham. "Aircraft maintainers used to spray the aircraft with water to rinse aircraft in the past."

By using the old method, different amounts of water were used every time, sometimes areas of the aircraft weren't rinsed well and many man-hours were expended," he said. "With the new system, a controlled amount of water is used, all areas of the aircraft are covered and time is saved."

After the tanker is rinsed, the water then runs down water culverts to a collecting tank, said Cunningham. "At 100 gallons per minute, it travels to the water filtration plant to be filtered and reused."

Though the project took months to design, Cunningham said he's pleased with the results. (AMC News Service courtesy of MacDill AFB Public Affairs).
